“PRIVATE SCHOOLS IN PAKISTAN”

BY

Mr. Tahir Andrabi & Mr. Asim Khwaja

on Friday 14 July 2006

at 10:30 AM

The lecture will be based on the articles attached with the email. Introduction of the author is given below

Tahir Andrabi is Associate Professor of Economics at Pomona College. Professor Andrabi is a graduate of Swarthmore College and holds a Ph.D. in Economics from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. He teaches classes in principles, economic development, game theory and international economics. In his current research, Professor Andrabi analyzes the rise of private and religious schooling and issues of school choice in rural Pakistan and industrial subcontracting in developing countries. On his last sabbatical, he was the founding director of the ALIF project, which aimed to develop learning initiatives in Pakistan through creative uses of the media. He was also a member of the tax and macroeconomic committees of the economic advisory board of the government of Pakistan in 1999-2000. He has been a visiting scholar at MIT, a research associate at LSE and a consultant for the World Bank. He is currently directing a World Bank funded project on quality of primary education in rural Punjab. Email: tandrabi@pomona.edu

Asim Khwaja is Assistant Professor of Public Policy. His areas of interest include economic development, corporate finance, education, political economy, industrial organization, contract theory, mechanism design, and computational economics. Combining fieldwork, micro-level empirical analysis, and theory, his recent work ranges from understanding political and informational constraints in emerging financial markets to examining the private education market in low-income countries. He received BS degrees in economics and in mathematics with computer science from MIT and a PhD in economics from Harvard. A Pakistani citizen, Khwaja was born in London, U.K., lived for eight years in Kano, Nigeria, the next eight in Lahore, Pakistan, and the current eight-plus years in Cambridge, Massachusetts. He continues to enjoy interacting with people around the globe. Email: akhwaja@ksg.harvard.edu
